DR. JAMES R. RICHARDS,
DIRECTOR OF THE CENTER, AND
FOZZIE THE CAT

The past year has been one of the most exciting and productive in the history of the Cornell Feline Health Center. It has been a time of change and innovation, fond farewells to old friends and hearty welcomes to new, recognition of new problems confronting cats and continued investigation of existing disorders. But the center's historic and unique commitment to the health and well-being of cats has remained constant.

DR. MEW, MASCOT OF THE CENTER

THE THREEFOLD MISSION ESTABLISHED ALMOST TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO BY THE FOUNDERS OF THE CORNELL FELINE HEALTH CENTER REMAINS STRONG TODAY:

- to find ways of preventing and curing diseases of cats by conducting and sponsoring breakthrough research;
- to educate veterinarians and cat owners about feline health by providing timely medical information and by promoting public understanding and awareness about any and all issues relating to cats; and
- to aid veterinarians when new or unknown feline diseases occur.

“to find ways of preventing and curing diseases of cats. . .”

CHARLES HAREINGOTN

The center supports research covering a broad range of feline health issues, including behavior, blood pressure, feline infectious peritonitis, feline immunodeficiency virus, vaccine-associated sarcomas, and duration of immunity conferred by vaccines. The following studies were conducted in 1997-98:

EXAMINATION OF BLOOD PRESSURE IN CATS WITH CARDIAC DISEASE

The primary goal of this study was to determine systolic blood pressure in cats that have heart disease, including hypertrophic cardiomyopathy, a common acquired condition. The secondary goal was to help disprove the widespread opinion that blood pressure measurements in pet cats presented to a veterinary hospital are inaccurate—perhaps even useless—owing to the animals' stress level, which is claimed to cause a “false” elevation of blood pressure in most cases.

Blood pressure was measured in feline patients presented to the Cornell Veterinary Medical Teaching Hospital for primary heart disease or various other conditions that required a cardiac evaluation as part of a complete diagnostic workup. Blood pressure was also measured in normal cats. The range of “normal” blood pressures in healthy cats reported in the veterinary literature is wide, including systolic pressures of up to 180 millimeters of mercury (mmHg).

Preliminary results indicated that normal systolic blood pressure in cats was less than 160 mmHG; values for most normal cats fell between 120 and 130 mmHg. Cats with hypertrophic cardiomyopathy or other heart disease showed no evidence of high systolic blood pressure. Conversely, cats with hyperthyroidism had an average systolic pressure that was considerably higher than normal, but those with other diseases or no evidence of heart disease had average systolic pressures within the normal range.

KITTEN TEMPERAMENT TEST: ITS VALUE AS A PREDICTOR OF ADULT CAT BEHAVIOR

People who surrender their pet cats to animal shelters often do so because the cats have developed behavior problems or personalities that are incompatible with the owners' expectations. Unfortunately, a large percentage of returned cats cannot subsequently be placed in homes. Researchers hope that the data collected from this study can be used to develop a reliable and easy-to-perform temperament test. Shelter personnel would administer the test, which would enable better prediction of an adult cat's temperament based on a kitten's behavior and make it easier to match kittens to prospective owners. This study may also elicit a longer-term investigation that would identify kittens likely to develop behavior problems as adults.

VACCINE-ASSOCIATED FELINE SARCOMA TASK FORCE

Veterinarians have recently noticed an increase in sarcomas (certain forms of cancer) appearing in cats at body sites where vaccines are commonly administered. The veterinary profession has formed a ten-member task force to address these rare but serious cancers.

The members are representatives from the American Association of Feline Practitioners, the American Animal Hospital Association, the American Veterinary Medical Association, the Veterinary Cancer Society, the U.S. Department of Agriculture, the Animal Health Institute, and the Cornell Feline Health Center. From the outset, the center has supported the efforts of the task force by helping fund research projects, developing client education pieces, and working closely with professional and lay media (print, radio, television, Internet) to educate cat owners and veterinarians about this serious problem. Dr. Richards is chairperson of the Education/Communication Subgroup of the task force.

DURATION OF IMMUNITY IN CATS VACCINATED WITH AN INACTIVATED FELINE PANLEUKO- PENIA, HERPESVIRUS, AND CALICIVIRUS VACCINE

A study conducted by the center's former director, Dr. Fred Scott, provided crucial information on the duration of protection induced by some commonly used feline vaccines. Traditionally, the standard "three-way" vaccine has been administered every year to maintain maximum immunity from the serious infectious diseases caused by feline panleukopenia virus, feline herpesvirus, and feline calicivirus. Dr. Scott's study, which showed that vaccination protects cats against these agents for longer than a year, has served as the basis for revised feline vaccine guidelines recently developed by the American Association of Feline Practitioners (AAFP) and the Academy of Feline Medicine (AFM). Drs. Scott and Richards served on the AAFP/AFM Feline Vaccine Guidelines panel that revised the guidelines, which have now been disseminated widely.

FELINE RENAL TRANSPLANTATION

Kidney transplantation has become an accepted technique for treating end-stage renal failure in humans, and modification of the surgical technique and immunosuppressive therapy has allowed it to become a treatment for cats as well.

The Cornell Feline Health Center is helping the new Companion Animal Hospital at Cornell initiate a feline renal transplantation program that promises to save the lives of many cats. Additionally, the program will enhance the training of veterinary students by allowing them to participate in the management of renal failure in cats, observe microsurgical techniques, and assist in the treatment of postoperative immunosuppressed patients.

SERUM MAGNESIUM LEVELS IN HOSPITALIZED FELINE PATIENTS

Magnesium is necessary for numerous biological functions in cats. Studies in other species have shown that altered concentrations of serum magnesium are associated with many clinical disorders and often correlate with disease and death. Considerable attention has been given to the role of dietary magnesium in the development of feline lower urinary tract disease.

Because little information is available about magnesium disorders in hospitalized cats, this study seeks to determine the incidence and prevalence of these disorders and to discover whether altered magnesium concentration is correlated with disease or death. Preliminary data show that a large percentage of cats admitted to the Cornell Companion Animal Hospital's intensive care unit have abnormal serum magnesium concentrations at some point during their hospitalization. In some cats, a correction of low serum magnesium has improved the response to treatment. Future studies may evaluate the incidence of altered magnesium concentrations in specific feline diseases and determine the effects of supplemental magnesium on clinical improvement of cats that have low serum concentrations.

ARTHROPOD TRANSMISSION OF FIV: A MODEL FOR CAPTIVE NONDOMESTIC FELIDS

suppression and disease in domestic cats; the virus is believed to be transmitted primarily through bites from infected cats. Seroconversion—production of antibody in response to viral exposure—has been documented in nondomestic cats. Over the past year and a half, the results of nearly 600 antibody tests performed at Cornell on 25 species of nondomestic cats from 63 different institutions showed that more than 70 samples were either positive or questionable for the presence of FIV antibody. Some of these nondomestic cats have undergone seroconversion even though they have not had direct contact with other infected cats. In these cases, FIV may have been transmitted by poor husbandry, insects, or a small animal carrier. The center is providing startup funds for a study designed to determine if arthropods such as ticks and mosquitoes play a role in the transmission of FIV in nondomestic cats. Such information may also be of importance for domestic cats.

RETROSPECTIVE FELINE INFECTIOUS PERITONITIS (FIP) OCULAR HISTOPATHOLOGIC STUDY

Archived eye tissues from cats that succumbed to FIP are being evaluated using a special technique called immunoperoxidase staining so as to gain a better understanding of the specific inflammatory changes that FIP induces in the eyes of affected cats.

DIRECTOR RETIRES

Under the insightful and compassionate leadership of Dr. Fred Scott from 1974 through 1997, the Cornell Feline Health Center has become the most recognized and respected feline specialty facility in the world. Dr. Scott's vision mirrored that of the center's founders—to create a veterinary medical specialty center with the sole purpose of improving the health and well-being of cats everywhere. His achievements are legion: he has written or co-authored nearly two hundred research papers and four textbooks; he has served as adviser for many graduate students, postdoctoral fellows, and research associates; and he has taught the nuances of feline infectious diseases to hundreds of veterinary students. Countless numbers of cats have lived longer and healthier lives as a result of his dedication to their care. Dr. Scott has left a permanent legacy.

No surprise to those who know him, Dr. Scott remains active in the profession and is currently involved in several research projects. Nonetheless, his retirement has allowed him to spend more time with family and friends.

"to educate veterinarians and cat owners about feline health. . ."

The Cornell Feline Health Center is dedicated to providing information about feline diseases and health care to veterinarians and cat owners through publications, seminars and short courses, and electronic media.

CORNELL BOOK OF CATS

The second edition of the highly acclaimed Cornell Book of Cats was released in early 1997. It has been extensively revised, reflecting the many recent advances in feline medicine and surgery. The book, which is the work of many authorities, is exhaustive in scope, covering feline medicine, surgery, nutrition, behavior, pediatrics, geriatrics, reproduction, and many other topics, written in language that is understandable to cat owners.

INFORMATION BROCHURES

For many years the center has produced client information brochures that can be used by veterinarians to provide information to cat owners. Several brochures were updated this past year; two new brochures are particularly noteworthy. Feline Vaccines: Benefits and Risks reflects the new feline vaccination recommendations developed by the American Association of Feline Practitioners and the Academy of Feline Medicine. The center was closely involved with the creation of these revised guidelines, which take into account the growing concern about the safety of vaccines and duration of protection they induce. The brochure explains the complexities of feline vaccines, including how they work, why they are important, reasons a vaccine series is given to kittens, the risks associated with vaccination, and why not every cat needs to have each vaccine every year. Also discussed are the common infectious diseases and how they are transmitted, enabling cat owners to help their veterinarians design optimal vaccination programs.

Vaccines and Sarcomas: A Concern for Cat Owners was written in response to growing concern about the development of tumors at vaccine sites, a rare but serious complication. Many thousands of copies have been made available to veterinarians across the country.

FELINE VACCINATION GUIDELINES

Drs. Scott and Richards served on a panel that developed revised feline vaccination guidelines. The eight-member panel, whose members are academicians, representatives from the feline biologics industry, and private practitioners, was formed by the American Association of Feline Practitioners and the Academy of Feline Medicine in response to the greater understanding of the duration of protection induced by vaccines (much of which was gained as a result of studies performed by the center) and the growing concern over vaccine safety. The guidelines have been disseminated widely and will revolutionize the manner in which cats receive vaccines, a major mainstay of protection from serious—even deadly—infectious diseases.

FELINE SYMPOSIUM

This year marked the Ninth Annual Feline Practitioners Symposium, renamed the Ninth Annual Fred Scott Feline Symposium in honor of Dr. Scott, who dreamed of having an annual national meeting for practitioners especially interested in feline medicine and surgery. Nearly two hundred veterinarians from around the world attended this year's conference, which included in-depth discussions of feline dermatology, ophthalmology, behavior, surgery, vaccine concerns, endocrine disorders, heartworm disease, feline immunodeficiency virus, and other feline infectious diseases.

THE DR. LOUIS J. CAMUTI MEMORIAL FELINE CONSULTATION AND DIAGNOSTIC SERVICE

This service, named for a beloved pioneer in feline veterinary medicine, continues to offer up-to-date information on all issues concerning cats. Our consulting veterinarian can answer specific questions and give expert advice based on the most current information and techniques in feline medicine. Cat owners and veterinarians can access this information in a timely, efficient manner. The 1-800-KITTY-DR number opens the door to this unique service.

MEDIA

Dr. Richards has used various media in many different ways to discuss issues of feline health. He has appeared several times on Fox News Channel's Pet News, a live television program that covers pet health issues. Topics included feline immunodeficiency virus, vaccine-associated sarcomas, and successful methods of introducing a new cat into the household. Obesity in pets was a topic he considered on CBS Saturday Morning. He has been interviewed for stories on vaccine-associated sarcoma issues in many professional journals and the lay media, including CNN's Science and Technology Week, U.S. News and World Report, the Washington Post, many regional television and radio markets, and Animal Instincts, a syndicated radio program produced in collaboration with veterinarians and veterinary colleges across the United States.

The Cornell Feline Health Center's World Wide Web page continues to expand. Located at <http://web.vet.cornell.edu/Public/FHC/FelineHealth.html>, the site receives thousands of "hits" yearly and continues to be an efficient way to provide information on feline health.

In March 1997, the first issue of CatWatch, the Newsletter for Cat People, was released. This monthly publication replaced the quarterly Perspectives on Cats and is expected to have a far larger circulation. By the year 2000, we expect an annual circulation exceeding 170,000, and by 2002, the projections are for more than 200,000. The center is very pleased with the breadth of coverage, readability, and flavor of this new publication and welcomes input from members.

NANCE PHOTOGRAPHY

Perhaps no issue confronting cats has gained more attention from cat owners and veterinarians this past year than the recently recognized association between certain feline vaccines and the development of serious forms of cancer called sarcomas. The Vaccine-Associated Feline Sarcoma Task Force (VAFSTF) was formed at the request of several major national veterinary organizations. The ten-member task force is charged with determining relative risk factors associated with the sarcomas; establishing the cause of the tumors, the best methods of treatment, and factors affecting the outcome of treatment; and educating and informing veterinarians and the public about this ongoing concern. Dr. Richards serves on the task force as chairperson of the Education/Communication Subgroup. The center also provides financial support to studies sponsored by VAFSTF.

Since its formation in 1974, the Cornell Feline Health Center has contributed significantly to the health of cats everywhere. The forward-thinking individuals responsible for its formation recognized the importance of having a single-mission center even before cats were given the respect they now enjoy.

Its past accomplishments are a source of pride, but the center was founded for the future; it is dedicated to serving the cause of cats well into the years ahead. The center's accomplishments continue to be made possible largely through the generous financial support of veterinarians, cat clubs, cat breeders, and individual cat lovers. As a contributor to the Cornell Feline Health Center, you can be proud that you are joining with us to help cats and the people who care for them. Thank you for playing such a crucial role in enhancing the well-being of cats both today and in the future.

Opportunities for Support

CASH GIFTS

Cash contributions provide funds necessary to strengthen and maintain our unit, thus giving us the financial resources to respond to current needs in our endeavors to prevent and cure feline diseases. You can increase the impact of your gift through a matching gift from your employer. Ask your employer for details on the company's matching gift policy.

PLANNED GIFTS

Unlike cash gifts, planned gifts provide financial resources for the center's future while you receive immediate tax benefits, income, or both based on the investment you choose. If you would like to discuss any of the following options, please contact Brad Carruth, Cornell Office of Trusts, Estates, and Planned Giving, at 800-377-2177.

Bequests. You can help ensure better health for future generations of cats by naming the center as a beneficiary in your will. To do so, use these words: I give, devise, and bequeath [description of property] to Cornell University, an educational corporation situated in Ithaca, New York, for the exclusive benefit of the Cornell Feline Health Center within the New York State College of Veterinary Medicine.

Life Income Agreements. This option allows you to make the center the remainder beneficiary of a trust you create during your lifetime while retaining income for yourself, that of a second beneficiary, or both. You will receive an immediate tax deduction when you create your trust.

Trusts. By establishing a trust, donors either name the center as the trust beneficiary or place assets in a trust fund that will generate income for the center over a specified term.

Stocks. Through your gift of appreciated securities, stocks, or bonds to the center, you may avoid some or all of the capital gains tax by deducting their full current market value as a charitable contribution.

DR. LOUIS J. CAMUTI MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT FUND

Dr. Louis J. Camuti, a well-known doctor in the New York metropolitan area, was the first veterinarian in the United States to devote his entire practice to cats. For more than sixty years, Dr. Camuti made house calls for his feline patients. Following his death in 1981, friends sought to honor his memory through the creation of the Dr. Louis J. Camuti Memorial Endowment Fund. Together with a small consultation fee, this fund helps defray the center's costs of approximately $100,000 a year to operate the Camuti Memorial Feline Consultation and Diagnostic Service. Cat lovers, breeders, and veterinarians worldwide use this service to obtain information on feline ailments and treatment options. Contributions to help maintain this fund are welcome.

MEMORIAL PROGRAM FOR FELINE COMPANIONS

The loss of a beloved pet can be devastating, sometimes causing emotion as intense as that felt over the loss of a family member. At times like this, our ability to express compassion for that individual's feelings can be immensely comforting. A memorial contribution in the pet's name shows your sensitivity in a way that will help cats live healthier lives. Veterinarians should call Gwen Frost at 607-253-3415. Individuals should call Sheryl Thomas at 607-253-3414.

Honor Roll

July 1, 1996–June 30, 1997

MEMBERSHIP

The center offers membership plans for both veterinarians and cat owners. Your membership dollars enable us to publish and disseminate current information on feline health care and promote feline health studies consistent with the center's mission. To subscribe or set up a gift membership, call Iva Heim at 607-253-3001.
